DANKSAGMÜLLER_RUF

Danksagmüller_Ruf use improvisation, recompositions, live electronics, historical performing practice and elements of 20th-century classical music to perform and explore, striving to establish a present-day experience of the impact Baroque music had in its time. They take the original sheet, strip it of its patina, expose its core and re-assemble it in their own way. The result is a sonic distillate free of any epochal thinking. buxtehude_21 is dedicated to the music and the musical environment of Dieterich Buxtehude, who was one of the most important Baroque composers from the Baltic German town of Lübeck. His elaborate, spectacular Abendmusiken concert series combines ecclesiastical aspects with politics and economy in a highly innovative and creative way – on the bridge

Franz Danksagmüller, owing to his excessive organ improvisations and his live-electronics performances, is among the most creative artists on the international concert scene. Celebrities he has worked with include Lauren Newton, Klaus Mertens, Ton Koopman and John Malkovich. His compositions are performed at venues all over the world. They focus on bringing together historical instruments with modern-day compositional processes and also reveal the versatility of the human voice in all its facets of expression. As a musical conductor, clarinetist and saxophonist, Bernd Ruf is considered a bridge-builder between musical genres, epochs and arts. His nomination for the 2001 Grammy Award in the Classical Crossover category has reassured him in pursuing his vision to combine apparent opposites in an artistic way. He has worked with several artists including Paul McCartney, Randy Brecker, Raul Jaurena, the ORF Radio Symphonic Orchestra and Cayuga Chamber Orchestra New York.
